See WOW World Premiere!

Without Walls Festival Productions
Romulus Kilgore's Mobile Happiness Bazaar

(World Premiere)

By Bennett Fisher

Are you unhappy? Of course you are. Just look at yourself. But Romulus Kilgore has what you need to feel better, and he's selling it at competitive prices. An interactive, snake-oil medicine show for the troubled soul, Romulus Kilgore's Mobile Happiness Bazaar is an impishly comic exploration of how we buy peace of mind.

This is a small in-progress workshop to share the work. Audience participation is a central part of the piece and each performance changes based on how the volunteers respond to questions, so this is the team's chance to test things out before the festival itself in October. It's just a rough sketch and very bare bones, but your presence will help immensely.

We are planning to present the piece Monday, June 8 at 6:30pm.

Convene in the plaza between Jake's Place and the Potiker.

The piece runs about 45 minutes.

Anne Kauffman Interview

Keeping tabs on New York theater is a tricky business, with shows of all stripes appearing at venues of every size. But when the 2015 season drew to a close, one thing was easy to notice: how many women enjoyed notable creative successes this year.

On a recent spring morning, some of these artists - all of them winners of 2015 Obie awards on Monday night - forsook the blossom and sunshine to gather on a basement stage. At HERE Arts Center, one of Gotham's premier launch pads for innovative projects, they joined Village Voice theater critic Tom Sellar to compare favorite shows from the closing theater season - and to talk about what it takes for creative women to succeed in this tough town.
The participants: performer-creator Bridget Everett (Rock Bottom); '99 MFA Directing Alum Anne Kauffman and playwright Clare Barron (You Got Older); and playwright Kate Benson and director Lee Sunday Evans (A Beautiful Day in November on the Banks of the Greatest of the Great Lakes). Following are excerpts from their conversation.
